

Description

The Blue Metropolis Awards for Excellence in Indigenous Studies are an initiative of Blue Metropolis International Literary Festival and the McConnell Foundation. The award recognizes two students, one francophone, the other anglophone, who are enrolled during the fall 2019 or winter 2020 in either an Indigenous Studies or Indigenous Literature program or an Anthropology program for their outstanding academic performance (excellence, perseverance, creativity and engagement). In addition to each receiving a $1,000 award, the two winning students will be invited to attend Blue Metropolis International Literary Festival (next edition: May 1 to 6, 2020) where they will be invited to read a short essay of their own composition during an event that is part of the Festival's series on Indigenous Literatures and Cultures. This essay should deal with social change and the role of the individual in a rapidly changing world, as well as the concepts of social inclusion and dialogue.

Information

Name

Surname

Age

Programme

Department

University

Home Address

Phone number

E-mail

Name of the professor who recommended you

E-mail of the professor who recommended you

Instructions

The student will answer the following question – What is the definition of a just society? – by means of a 200- to 300-word essay. The essay will take the form of a personal, critical and engaged reflection on issues related to the social conditions of Canada's First Peoples. The essay's line of reasoning will be supported by a number of documentary sources. The student may choose to write a narrative, descriptive, persuasive or expository essay.

Return this document to frederick.gaudin-laurin@metropolisbleu.org before Friday March 20th , 2020 11:55 P.M. titled as follow: NAME_Surname_FirstPeopleEssay_UNIVERSITY.